We don't need a new Earth. We need a new way of living on this one

Our planet doesn't need a replacement — it needs responsibility.
By changing how we live, we can protect what truly matters.

What Does Climate Justice Mean?

Climate justice means taking care of our planet in a fair way. The Earth gives us air, water, and food, but pollution from factories and energy use is changing the weather, making it hotter, stormy, or too dry. Some countries caused most of this pollution, but other countries suffer more from its effects. Climate justice is about sharing the responsibility to protect the Earth so that everyone, rich or poor, can live safely.
